

Publication Guidelines for 'Constantine's Letters'

I. General instructions

An article to be published (between 18,000 and 36,000 characters with gaps altogether) should only be sent as the .rtf text file format along with the .pdf version. The text has to contain a title (a subtitle), an abstract (at least 800 characters with gaps, in Slovak and English), key words (in Slovak and English) and a summary (at least 1,200 characters with gaps in English). Article manuscripts should be in the Palatino Linotype font type (Unicode font), size 12, spacing 1.5, and A4 paper size with margins of 2.5 cm.

II. Two versions of an article manuscript

Two version of an article manuscript should be sent by the author(s). One version is for editors and the other one for reviewers. In the version for editors there should be a name of the author(s) under the title (and subtitle) of an article manuscript. Then the contact information (author's affiliation) in Slovak and English ought to be added after the summary. The aforementioned contact information includes the author's first name and surname, degree(s), institutional affiliation and e-mail address. The version of an article manuscript for reviewers should not contain the author's name and contact information. Its text in sections related to the author's scientific work ought to be written in the third version singular. There cannot be mentioned acknowledgments and any references to funding sources. Publications, studies and articles of the author(s) should be cited in text after this manner: ANONYMOUS, the publication year (e.g. ANONYMOUS 1995). Any other details must be omitted in this citation. Eventually, the electronic version of the proposed article manuscript for reviewers ought to be only named after its title or the first five words of its title. Then properties of this electronic document should be anonymized as well.

III. References and in-text citations

For the references of both article manuscript versions mentioned above an author(s) standardly uses parenthetical references in the text, footnotes and in appendices which are followed by the list of References at the end of the text – before the summary. References and intext citations should be written in Latin alphabet. If publication in Cyrillic and Greek alphabet, or in other writing system, is cited, the name(s) of an author(s) should be transliterated into English in a parenthetical reference (or first word or first two words from the title of publication with no author translated into English). In the list of References the English translation of cited publication (except for the original version of the title) should be also given along with the transliteration of an author's/authors' name/names. Examples are show in the chapter (no. VII) called Sample Citations and Other Rules that you can find below.

IV. Appendices

An article may include also appendices. Before appendices should be stated Slovak and English title “Prílohy/Appendix”. These can be illustrations (pictures and tables) as well as text tables. Appendices must not be included in article manuscripts, but they need to be attached separately. Appendices must contain notes placed after the summary in an article manuscript. These notes should be in Slovak as well in English. For illustrations in the text use an abbreviation “fig.” Plates, units with more than one illustration follow the main body of the text, and are placed before the summary. They have got the “pl.” abbreviation. Text tables are word-numeral compositions of data arranged in lines and columns. With these, there is no abbreviation, just the term “table”. Appendices should be referred in the main text in parentheses.

V. Illustrations

Illustrations provided should be of sufficient quality and standard file format:

1. black and white drawings should be sent as 1-bit black and white images of 300 dpi resolution size in .tif file format;
2. drawings, pictures and photographs in grey scale should be sent as 8-bit grey scale images of 300 dpi in .jpg file format;
3. drawings, pictures and photographs in colour should be sent at least as 24-bit RGB colour scale pictures of 300 dpi in .jpg file format.

VI. Time range in the text

A time range in the text, e. g. years of a ruler’s reign, should be separated by a dash with two gaps, e.g. “Pope Adrian I (772 – 795)”.

VII. Sample Citations and Other Rules

9. Reference to an archive source

Reference:

Slovak National Archive in Bratislava (abbreviated to SNA), collection (abbreviated to c.). Representative Office of the Information and Public Education (abbreviated to ROIPE), box (abbreviated to b.) 52, number of the unit (abbreviated to n. u.) 785.

In-text citation:
(SNA, c. ROIPE, b. 52, n. u. 785)

10. Reference to the periodical press

The reference to the periodical press is similar to the reference to an article in a journal, but the difference is that the exact publication date should be stated there.

Reference:

Štrba, Tibold. 1939. Hlinkova garda v Kremnici. In Slovák XXI/273, the 26th of November 1939, 5.

In-text citation:

(Štrba 1939, 5).

11. Reference to primary sources

References to the primary sources are more or less similar to the references to monographs and non-periodical proceedings. The reference has to include the name of an author in the most commonly used form and the title of the work in the original language (works in other languages than Latin should be cited also in Latin if the Latin version is common). The data should be followed by the reference to a monograph, proceedings, or collection of primary sources in which the primary source, its translation or the primary source with its translation was published. Apart from the name of an author and title (in the case of long titles they should be shortened to two or three words) of the work in-text citation should include a number of the book, chapter and paragraph, if these are stated. If it is a problem to state an author of a primary source, or its title (mainly in the case of charters), or if such information is irrelevant, you should cite just a title or abbreviation of collection of primary sources, in which a primary source was published, in the text along with a publication year and pages. Principles of the translation and transliteration of references in non-Roman alphabets (it is explained below – in subchapter 13) should be maintained in regard to primary sources as well.

12. Reference to publication when there is no given author

In an in-text citation the shortened title of the publication with no author should be included in place of an author. Then the first word or first two words from the title of publication with no author (or the abbreviation of the publication's title) should be stated at the beginning of a reference entry in the list of References.

14. Reference to an Internet source

All the aforementioned kinds of publication can belong to this category, but the difference is that they are accessible on the Internet. Apart from publications websites belong to Internet sources too. A website address should follow a reference entry (made according the publication guidelines mentioned above) in the list of References.

15. Two or more publications by the same author published in the same year

Two or more publications written by the same author in the same year should be differentiated by the addition of the letter "a", "b", "c" and so forth in references and in-text citations. Then the reference entries are listed alphabetically by a title in the list of References.

Reference:

In-text citation:

(Benkő 2000b, 597-598)

16. Multiple in-text citations and a page range

In case of more than one in-text parenthetical citation, citations should be separated by a semicolon [e.g. (Smith 1989, 58; Colus 1998, 16)]. If there are more than one page or two consecutive pages in a parenthetical reference, they should be divided by a hyphen [e.g. (Smith 1989, 77-78)], or in the case of two consecutive pages the first one should be followed by the letter "f" [e.g. (Smith 1989, 77f)]. When an author intends to cite after the particular page also an undetermined number of pages, he will attach to the aforementioned page two "f" letters [e.g. (Smith 1989, 77ff)].

17. Place of issue, publication date, and page range in references

If the place of issue is not mentioned in a reference, the “s. l.” (sine loco) abbreviation should be used. In case of two or more places they are separated by a dash with two gaps (e.g. London – New York). If no publication date is available, the “s. a.” (sine anno) abbreviation should be used, and if there are not pages in the source, the “s. p.” (sine pagina) abbreviation should be used.
